

All in Good Taste*
Curt Vevang

Being a beer guy I'm often amused with wine tasting folks that blather and sigh.
They sip and they spit as though they're confused,
deciding I guess which one they should buy.

"To die for" they say, "you gotta try this",
with pinkies held high they offer up cheers.
They drink to their health, this wine, they insist,
pretending to know the very best years.

They swirl it around and smell the bouquet,
they flaunt all the terms, shiraz and rose.
They're tasting they say, but if you ask me,
they don't have a clue, merlot from chablis.

Perhaps I'm lowbrow but I'd have to say, the very best taste that I've come across is vanilla ice cream and chocolate sauce.

* Originally published November 2013 in the Journal of Modern Poetry as Pleasing the Palate